Analysing Semi-Structured Interviews to Explore Sexual Decision-Making and HIV/STI Risk Perception Among Female Sex Workers: A Grounded Theory Approach
Analysing Semi-Structured Interviews to Explore Sexual Decision-Making and HIV/STI Risk Perception Among Female Sex Workers: A Grounded Theory Approach

About This Dataset

Data source citation

Transcripts from my PhD thesis which focused on the role of sexual decision-making and risk perception in the adoption of HIV/STI risk reduction practices among female sex workers.

Full title of originating dataset

Sexual decision-making and HIV vulnerability among female sex workers in Jamaica.

Data author(s) and affiliations

University of the West Indies, Mona Department of Community Health & Psychiatry

Funding sources/suppliers

Principal’s New Initiative Grant University of the West Indies, Mona
Sample/sampling procedures

Purposive and thematic sampling

Data collection dates

November 2015–February 2016

Time frame of analysis

November 2015–April 2016

Unit of analysis

Sex workers, sex work, and HIV/STI prevention

Location covered by data

Jamaica West Indies

Abbreviations, conventions or notation devices

HIV = Human immune-deficiency virus

STI = Sexually transmitted infection